

Watch the build of America's Largest Convention Center

View the construction time-lapse of Chicago's McCormick Place which covers over 2.6 million square feet.

ATLANTA – April 19, 2018 – OxBlue, the pioneer in construction camera technology, releases a professionally produced time-lapse detailing the construction process of North America's Largest Convention Center, McCormick Place.

The professionally edited time-lapse captures the entire project from the ground up through more than 181,000 high-definition photos. McCormick Place developers documented the project with four OxBlue time-lapse construction cameras from different vantage points of the build. The center features over 2.6 million square feet of exhibit halls across a series of four buildings: The North, South, West, and Lakeside Center. Connected by pedestrian promenades and sky bridges, McCormick Place offers a series of shops, cafes, restaurants, and other visitor amenities.

McCormick Place expects to host 4 million visitors a year in its 600,000 square feet of meeting room space and four ballrooms. It also offers assembly seating for 18,000 people and three theaters with seating for 300 each.

“Chicago has nearly 50 high-rise construction projects under construction and being able to share some of that progress with the public through time-lapse photography is a great way to showcase exciting projects like McCormick Place.”

–Chandler McCormack, CEO
