

Jote Taddese

Jote Taddese is Lifetime-Learner, a Coach and a Mentor focused on cultivating a culture of curiosity to inspire innovation and co-creation in order to drive meaningful business value in matrixed organizations.

Jote is an accomplished professional in the field of Information Technology with over 20 years of industry experience in both government and corporate sectors. Jote currently works at a Global Medtech company as a Sr. IT Strategist focused on enabling digital transformations through the use of data analytics and business insights.

Jote is a co-founder of an African Diaspora led social enterprise startup called DiaspoCare which aims to provide African diaspora members to be able to take care of the healthcare needs of their family members back in their home countries. Jote is also a current board president of the world's largest shipper of text and library books to the African continent called Books For Africa, a Minnesota based non-profit organization.