Local Environmental Rules and Regulations

Interpreting local environmental regulations can be complicated, with most buried in the land development code. Want to know what city and county environmental rules apply to your site without a nuisance process?

With the Local Environmental Regulations Add-On, Transect specialists will research local county and municipal codes and regulations for rules and permits specific to natural resources constraints like wetlands, protected species, vegetation, and historic resources.

State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) Records Search

Understanding your project's risk for the presence of cultural resources is important for regulatory compliance. Transect can tell you about publicly known cultural sites, but many permits require a confidential SHPO records search.

The SHPO Records Search Add-On allows you to bring your desktop report full circle with an in-depth archaeological desktop search. Transect will connect you with qualified archaeologists to dig up SHPO record information & summarize what they mean for your project at a predictable, reasonable cost.

Planning and Zoning Reports

County and city development codes are changing constantly, making planning and zoning research a hassle.

With the Planning and Zoning Reports Add-On, you can save time and effort by putting the research process in the hands of experts that will provide local jurisdictional information on zoning, whether the project type would be permitted, and the procedure for obtaining approval and permits for site construction.

Slope and Aspect Calculation

Getting slope and aspect calculations from a surveyor can be costly and excessive.

With the Slope and Aspect Calculation Add-On, Transect will conduct the calculations needed for your project and add them to your Transect Report without breaking the bank.
