INBOUND MARKETING EXAMPLES

INTRODUCTION

Are you feeling the itch to refresh your inbound marketing campaigns, but unsure where to begin? Inbound is all about publishing helpful and interesting content your audience wants to consume, but with the infinite number of approaches and ever-increasing creative standards, the possibilities of how your campaigns might take shape can be overwhelming.

To help get the inspiration flowing, we've collected 32 examples of truly enviable inbound marketing. Whether you want to rethink your approach to social media, email, or blogging, we've curated top-notch examples to expand your thinking. Or, perhaps you are ready to experiment with a new medium for your content. Explore the video and microsite chapters to discover what the leaders in multimedia marketing are creating to share their story.

While we've included the industry each enviable brand is operating in, don't stay confined within your vertical. This guide is all about taking a step outside of your niche to expand how you think about inbound marketing.

But before we dive in, a warning. While some may say that copying is the highest form of flattery, see these examples as a means to your content genius, not the exact playbook. Keep your own persona and product in mind, and let the overarching strategy behind each example prompt your brainstorming. You might be surprised how an international supermarket could inspire your insurance firm's marketing, or how a backpack retailer could make you rethink content for your SaaS startup.

SOCIAL MEDIA

STARBUCKS

Starbucks was an early adopter of social media, and today continues to use beautiful visuals to give customers the longing for a warm cup of coffee. But aside from their photography, Starbucks' Facebook page includes a myriad of extra features including job postings, contests, and even an international app. Can't get that latte out of your head? Next time you're on the go, test out the store locator embedded right in their Facebook page.

Give thanks for the healthy kids in your life, and give to those who are not.

CHOBANI

When you have an extensive catalog of products, the potential for visual marketing is endless. But what about when you specialize in one product? Chobani is an excellent example of diverse photography for a single, simple item: a spoonful of yogurt. Check out Chobani's Instagram to browse colorful photos of fruit salads, pineapple smoothies, and frosted pumpkin cookies. You too might begin experimenting with all the tasty possibilities of greek yogurt.

HERSCHEL SUPPLY CO.

There is nothing quite like Herschel Supply's Instagram account. Between mountaintop views and chaotic city streets, each one of their breathtaking photos communicates a story of travel and exploration. The best part? Most of Herschel Supply's posts come directly from their customers. By tracking the #WellTravelled hashtag, Herschel Supply has cultivated a community of followers and adventure-seeking artists. Warning: Overwhelming feelings of wanderlust may result immediately after following.

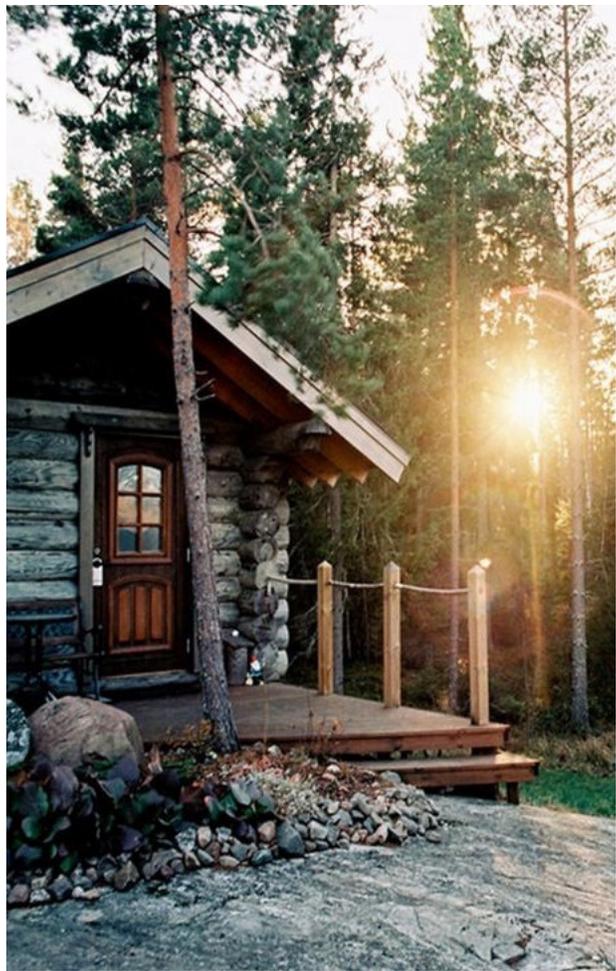

101 THINGS TO DO WITH YOUR KIDS BESIDES WATCHING TV

SEWICKLEY ACADEMY

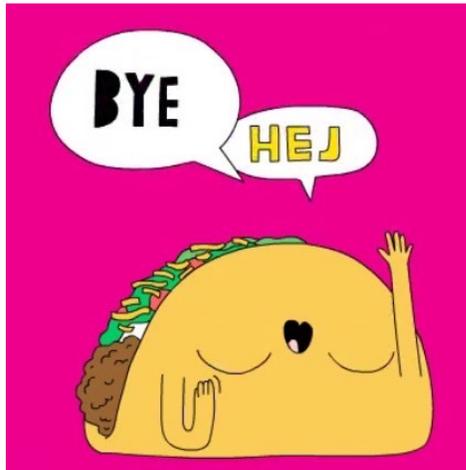

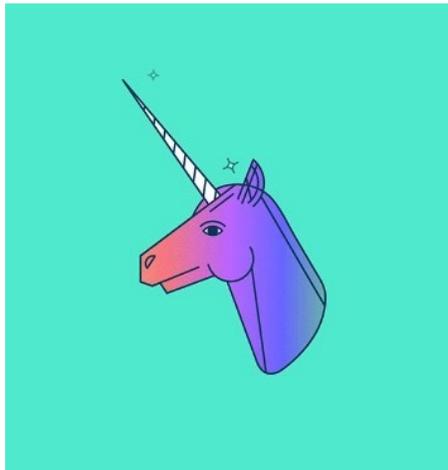

Even if you're new to the inbound marketing space, you've probably figured out the cardinal rule: Be helpful. As opposed to the intrusive nature of outbound marketing, inbound gains the trust of potential customers by creating content the audience actually wants. Check out the Pinterest account of Sewickley Academy, a college preparatory school in Pennsylvania, for an impressive collection of helpful content geared toward helping parents through one of the hardest decisions they have to make: where to send their child to school.

L.L.BEAN

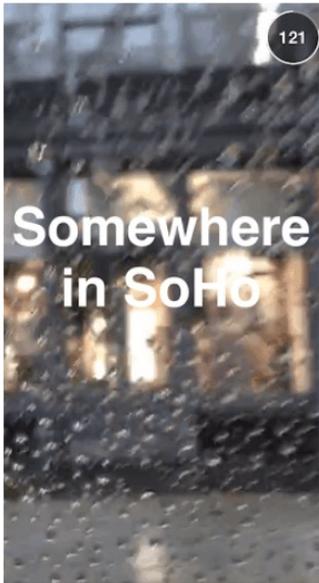

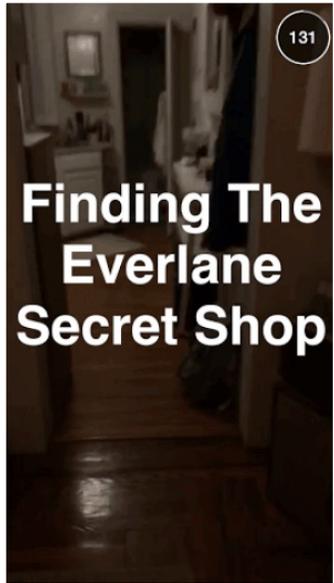

When your brand has been around since 1912, how do you keep product marketing fresh? Value the customer over the product. Take L.L.Bean's Pinterest account, for example. Instead of posting repetitive photos of their traditional (but oh-so-comfy) winter boots, L.L.Bean's boards feature stunning photos of sunrise hikes and crackling campfires. With this strategy, L.L.Bean follows Pinterest best practice by curating boards around the aspirations of their target customer.

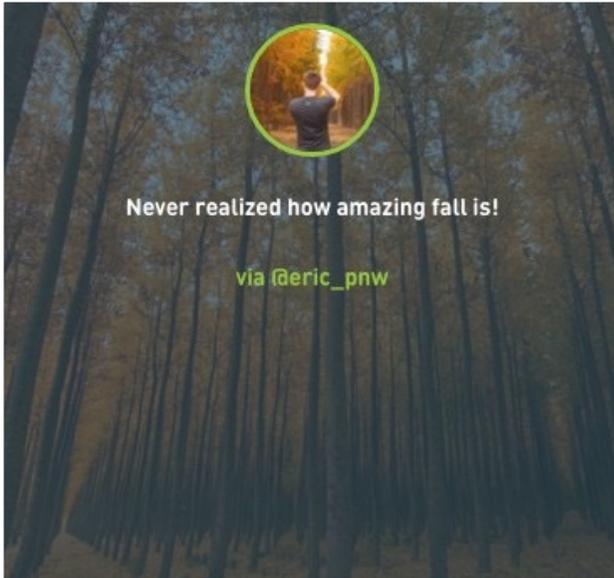

TACO BELL

If there is one part of your marketing where you should flaunt a bit of your personality, it's social media. Taco Bell's Twitter account is a prime example. With the brand's hand-drawn doodles of unicorns and tacos, you'll feel like you've opened one of your middle school notebooks. As quirky as it is, Taco Bell has still established a consistent brand image. Plus, the brand's creative use of animated GIFs results in a social strategy you can't help but love.

EVERLANE

Each of Everlane’s social media accounts work to break down the barrier between the customer and their favorite brand. By illustrating the how and why behind what they do, Everlane provides a window into company culture and differentiates themselves against similar fashion brands. As recent social media trends shift away from the public and toward the private, Everlane has done an exceptional job of using Snapchat to send messages to their customers that feel honest and personal.

REI

As you work to raise brand awareness, often it's better to go a bit off the beaten path -- even if it means excluding yourself from the largest shopping day of the year. REI created its fair share social media buzz for Black Friday 2015 as they encouraged shoppers to #OptOut of their post-turkey trip to the mall and instead spend the day in nature. Yet, the holiday season is not the only unique social campaign REI launched. Check out their 1440 Project for an admirable example of inviting the customer into your social sharing.

Within each post, the platform makes it easy to follow the author, respond to the content, or dig deeper into related stories.

MICROSOFT

Who says B2B marketing has to be boring? Check out Microsoft Stories and prepare to be impressed. The first thing you'll notice is visual quality of the site. As opposed to following a blog template, each post is customized with parallax scrolling, animated graphics, and tedious illustrations. Beyond the design, the writing is reminiscent of feature journalism, packed with empathetic characters and a personal touch. Despite the immense resources of a brand like Microsoft, this blog nevertheless sets a high bar for product storytelling.

TOMS

By sharing the stories of the people the brand supports, TOMS is able to quickly turn prospects into all-out brand evangelists for their one-for-one giving model. In their latest piece of visual marketing, TOMS uses virtual reality to take the audience alongside on a giving trip. Drag the frame to get a 360-degree view of the surroundings. Better yet, tilt your smartphone for a seamless experience. As more brands discover the possibilities of virtual reality, expect for this form of video marketing to be around for a while.

HOOTSUITE

Successful B2B marketers know the power of the case study. And especially for brands in the SaaS space, these success stories are often necessary to share the customizable nature of the product for the user. Hootsuite, creator of a social media management dashboard, uses video to highlight their customer's personality in each case study. Check out the series on their YouTube channel to see an impressive example of each part of the video process: interviewing, production, and editing.

KLEENEX

For this marketing example, you might just need a box of tissues. Entitled "Best Friends," Kleenex tells the story of a man who finds companionship in a dog who shares his same challenges. What makes this piece of content truly remarkable is the lack of explicit advertising for the brand itself. Instead, Kleenex uses its platform and name recognition simply to share a worthy story and inspire audiences.

WISTIA

You'd expect a video hosting platform to excel at video marketing. Yet, it's not simply the lighting and lack of jump cuts that makes this an enviable marketing example. Wistia's video library consists of self-service tutorials to help businesses create awesome marketing. But before you pass this off as another set of boring educational videos, take a look. Wistia's content is helpful, courteous, and honestly, fun to watch. Packed with humor, Wistia sets an example of engaging writing brands should aspire to emulate.

THE STORIES WE WEAR

He's Gonna Need a Good Shirt. Connie Magee. Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Dear Patagonia,
Today is my dear friend Corey's birthday, and he got a ratty, dyed, indestructible Patagonia climbing shirt from me.

The shirt belonged to me and my freshly-ex-boyfriend Mike. I say we, because though he owned the shirt first, it was ours. He "stole/inherited" it from his best friend in high school and early climbing partner (note the old-school tag...this goes back to the early 90's). It used to be tan or grey, but somehow it got dyed purple during a late night drinking incident. No one remembers what the stain on the chest is from. I think my guy was actually wearing this shirt the first time I saw him in the Gunks and I kind of knew I was going to fall in love. In my mind's eye, Mike is flaking a rope, shy smile, blue eyes flashing, ready for the next hard line. The shirt was already old when I met Mike. He'd been through some major health problems including a kidney transplant, but he came out resilient, climbing stronger than ever. Just durable. Like this purple shirt. It is the splash of color in so many memories of hundreds of amazing trips to the Dacks, White Mountains, Chatty, the Red, the New, all over Utah, Colorado, Potrero, Spain, Acadia, Cochise, Wild Iris, Vedauwoo...

It's seen nearly every state in America, late-day bouldering sessions, trips to five or six countries and was always one of the key items in the trip bag. We sometimes negotiated over who got to wear it. It has survived so many crack climbs, so many snaggy bushwhacks, so many WTF benighted descents. I think one of us was even wearing it during an unprotected hvy in NC when the weather turned nasty, we couldn't find the rap station and we had to wrap up in ropes and leaves

More than just a Frisbee. Kern Duocote. Baltimore, MD.

"All along the Pacific Crest Trail, this served as my cutting board, fan, frisbee, and plate. It hit the ground a few too many times and cracked. Nothing ductape can't fix" - Kern

15 Year Old Fanny. Kacie Lynn. Chattanooga, TN.

"I've had this fancy pack for 15 years. It's been with me on the farm, at concerts, everywhere. If these stains and bar grime on it could tell their stories, I'd be in jail. Just kidding!" -Kacie

Matt Looby. With a Little Help From a Friend. Horseshoe Canyon, AR.

"I tore the seat during the last day of a bouldering trip at Stone Fort, TN. I was really bummed since I loved these red pants. I asked one of my friends to patch them up so she used a piece of fabric from an old pair of pants to patch up the large hole, and also sewed up the smaller tear. I used them again for a little bit but they re-tore. So I brought them in to the Worn Wear wagon and y'all patched them right up for me! My sending pants are back in My Daughter & My Hat. Matt McNally.

Dear Patagonia,
My daughter means everything to me. Even as a young man I knew that I wanted to be a good father someday, and that I wanted to raise my kids with respect for the wilderness. My youth was a bit topsy turvy...and through all of the hurdles of my parents living two states apart, the wild lands between Salt Lake and Huntington Beach meant everything. The long drives with Dad always meandered through seashores, deserts, and canyons...delaying the inevitable drop off for just a few days longer. The mountains, campfires, and moving waters from Utah to California became the thread that kept me connected with my family. A thread that always wore well with time. Just like a good hat. I have always been a "hat guy." As a bald, bearded, beast nowadays my hats mean even more to me. I have worn numerous Patagonia and Black Diamond hats over the years. Each one getting seemingly grosser than the last. Sweat stained, torn, broken, battered and loved...just like me. My little girl loves my hats. She loves the smell and she loves to make fun of my shiny head underneath. She loves to steal them from me and she loves to hold onto them while she rides on my shoulders as we hike through the Wasatch Mountains. She laughs almost as beautifully as her mother does. She loves to keep up with her brother, she loves to sleep on her dog Moses, and she has the kindest heart you could ever imagine. I love my daughter, I love my son, I love my wife, I love the wilderness, and I love this hat.

The drive behind much of Patagonia's marketing is the Worn Wear campaign, a program that encourages customers to repair their damaged outdoor gear rather than buy new items. The heart of the campaign consists of stories told by actual customers. These narratives are enhanced with a variety of multimedia elements, including how-to articles for common clothing repairs, a beautiful Instagram account, and even a 30-minute documentary. Overall, Patagonia stands out by sharing customer stories through a nontraditional campaign angle.

COCAINENOMICS

"I would rather have a grave in Colombia than a jail cell in the U.S."
- Pablo Escobar

Cartel member José Gonzalo Rodríguez Gacha built the cartel's military arm, hiring British and Israeli mercenaries to train his men, and uniting with right-wing death squads and paramilitary groups battling Colombia's leftist guerrillas.

PLATA O PLOMO
Escobar's challenge was simple: "Plata o plomo" ("Take my silver or take my lead").

Finally, the Medellín organization used vast amounts of money to bribe law enforcement and government officials. The bribes were the criminal equivalent of legitimate businesses hiring lobbyists and paying regulatory fines. Although it meant handing over "a very sizeable share of their income" in bribes, Heymann says, it was simply a line item on the cartel's profit and loss statement. Of course, the bribes came with a not-so-subtle threat of violence. Escobar's challenge, oft repeated,

OF THE OFFICE?

HOW TECHNOLOGY IS SHAPING THE WORKPLACE OF THE FUTURE

Today, the cloud has become impossible to ignore. While we're always hearing about how technology is going to change everything, it now seems that innovative approaches to how we live, work and play are having a drastic impact on everyday life. What does the workplace look like in a world where physical location has become unimportant, and where people are able to connect seamlessly from almost anywhere on the planet?

100% of executives surveyed thought that workers of the future would be expected remain in close contact while on vacation.

INTUIT

In the realm of B2B marketing, a solid grasp of data visualization can be a make-it-or-break-it attribute. For an impressive example of an infographic that not only displays data, but animates it, check out "Death of the Office?" In this infographic, the UK division of financial software company Intuit explores the growing trend of working from home and how that has affected workplace culture.

CHIPOTLE

As Chipotle has gained popularity, so too has its non-traditional marketing. The fast food chain knows its audience well, targeting each hand-drawn cup design and social media post toward the Millennial generation and a goal of word-of-mouth marketing success. Chipotle continued this strategy in their creation of “Taste Invaders,” an Atari-style online game that challenges players to shoot lasers from a foil-wrapped burrito.

LITMUS

Litmus, an email testing and analytics platform, sets a high bar for what campaign emails can accomplish. As opposed to static text, each email uses eye-catching GIFs and bold colors to make the reader feel like they're on a professionally designed website, not in their inbox. Because of the superior visual elements, Litmus avoids the graymail trap and invites subscribers to explore their content further.

JETBLUE

There are few brand emails that will make you blush quite like JetBlue. While their design is clean and simple, the cheeky content hits the airline's personality perfectly every time. Each email has a distinct purpose to avoid cluttering the audience's inbox. Meanwhile, even the unsubscribe email is witty enough to make you reconsider your decision to stop the emails.
